GLOBAL URBAN DEVELOPMENT

Carter throws peanuts to cities

By Marc A. Weiss

12 February 1977

The White House

A few weeks ago, the President announced his new urban policy program. The program includes a series of initiatives aimed at stimulating economic growth and reducing unemployment in urban areas. The program is expected to create jobs for thousands of people and to help revitalize the nation’s cities. The President’s plan includes a number of measures designed to encourage private investment, improve public transportation, and stimulate the economy. The program is expected to have a significant impact on the nation’s cities and to bring about a renewed sense of optimism and hope for the future.